THE National Leagues were established by the 1925 Congress. The first final was in hurling in 1926 and a year later Laois beat Dublin in the initial football decider. There was no football final in 1930 and the competitions were suspended in 1942, 1943, 1944 and 1945 because of the war.

Laois have not appeared in a final since that 1927 win. The county is thus the only one with the perfect record in finals.

However, Longford also won the title in the only year they qualified for a decider. In 1966 they met New York in games at Longford and Croke Park, and won the title on aggregate scores.

But the significant point is that, after winning the first leg, Longford lost the second match, and thus rank as the only county to take a title, although beaten in the last game of a League series.

The final specialists are Mayo, who appeared in their 11th decider last June. Their first was in 1934. Next in line are Kerry with 10 outings between 1928 and last June.

Mayo also show the way as regards titles won in succession, with six between 1933-34 and 1938-39, and lead the winners' list as well with 10 crowns. Their nearest rivals are Kerry, who became the only county so far to beat Mayo in a decider (last June) to bring their record to nine.

Kerry scored Munster's first title win in 1928, Mayo brought the title to the West for the first time in 1934, and Derry completed the provincial circuit with a win over Clare in 1947.

The year 1950 brought another important chapter in the history of the competition. New York not only made their debut in a final, but scored a win over Cavan at Croke Park. The exiles competed in 1951 and 1952, and then took part in a series of games for the St. Brendan Cup before returning to League fare proper in 1964-65.

Last year's final (Kerry 0-11; Mayo 0-8) was one of only three to fail to produce a single goal. The first was in 1956 (Cork 0-8; Meath 0-7), and the second in 1960, when the only all-Ulster decider resulted in an 0-12 to 0-9 win for Down over Cavan.

The highest score by any team is 28 points (4-16), a total put up by Kerry in their 1961 win over Derry. Kerry's 1-3 against Cavan in 1931 was the lowest by a victorious side.

The best tally by a losing team was 17 points and that worthwhile total was achieved not once, but twice by Kildare. They lost 3-8 to 3-13 to Dublin in 1958 in a match that produced more scores than any other at a combined total of 39 points and were beaten 2-14 to 2-11 by Down in 1968.

These figures do not, of course, take into consideration scores in the two-leg games featuring New York and the "home" winners. Those finals were introduced in 1965.

In all, 17 counties have appeared in the concluding round and 11 have won the title. New York added two titles to their 1950 success.

The unsuccessful counties were Kildare (1928, 1929, 1958 and 1968), Wexford (1938 and 1946), Fermanagh (1935), Clare (1947), Louth (1949) and Carlow (1954).

LAST MEETING

THE last major clash between Kerry and Mayo was in the National League final in June, 1971, when Kerry completed the big championship and League double with a 0-11 to 0-8 win.

Mayo, who were defending champions, opened well and were 0-5 to 0-3 ahead after 20 minutes of play. But Kerry gradually took command from then on and finished good winners.

A bright star for Kerry was Paud Lynch, who deputised superbly for the absent Mick O'Connell. Mick O'Dwyer, Eamonn O'Donoghue, Donie O'Sullivan and Tom Prendergast were others to shine for Kerry, while prominent for Mayo were Ray Prendergast, Joe Earley, Joe Corcoran and Tom Fitzgerald.

Corcoran and O'Dwyer were the chief scorers. The Mayo man kicked 0-7, all from frees, and O'Dwyer pointed five frees and scored a sixth from play.

The teams were:

KERRY: J. Culloty; D. O'Sullivan, P. O'Donoghue, S. Fitzgerald; T. Prendergast, J. O'Keefe, M. O'Shea; P. Lynch, D. J. Crowley; B. Lynch, P. Griffin, E. O'Donoghue; M. Gleeson, M. Higgins, M. O'Dwyer. Sub.—Derry Crowley for Fitzgerald.

MAYO: E. Rooney; S. Hughes, R. Prendergast, J. Earley; J. Carey, J. Morley, B. O'Reilly; S. Kilbride, P. J. Loftus; T. Fitzgerald, J. Gibbons, J. Corcoran; W. McGee, J. J. Cribbin, D. Griffith. Subs.—S. O'Grady for Kilbride; R. Niland for O'Reilly.

The League Specialists

Six wins from six finals between 1933-34 (the first year the county reached a decider) and 1938-39 underline the quality of the football produced by Mayo. Furthermore, on the way to establishing what ranks as the record for titles in succession in both football and hurling, Mayo struck a tremendous winning streak of no fewer than 57 games without defeat from August 1935 to August 1937!

Nor does this record give the complete picture, for it is by no means stretching the truth to say that Mayo actually won seven National Leagues in succession. This comes out by virtue of the fact that the county did not compete in 1939-40, and then returned to the competition in the following season and went on to regain the title, for 1940-41.

That was such a unique period in the annals of the county that it is understandable that Mayo have not since remotely approached anything like the deeds of the great men of the 'Thirties. At the same time, in view of that inspiring tradition, it is still surprising to find that the county's appearances in the concluding round have been in the more modern era about as rare as a sunny day in December.

Two finals, 1948-49 and 1953-54, and two wins, up to 1969-70, contrast starkly with the earlier achievements. The 1969-70 season ushered in the latest noteworthy chapter of events with a win over Down for title No. 10.

And failures to Kerry in recent times? There was the 1969 All-Ireland championship semi-final, when the Munster county got home by a point—0-14 to 1-10. Then there was last season's League final when Kerry not only took the title but made history by inflicting the first defeat on a Mayo team in a decider.

Yet, the series of wins in the League over the past three seasons indicates that Mayo's football talents have come into bloom again.

● Cover picture . . . a splendid action study from the Kerry-Derry League semi-final as the Derry goalkeeper, John Somers, clears his lines.

● Johnny Carey — backed up by colleague Ray Prendergast — fields safely to break up an Offaly attack in the drawn semi-final of the League on April 16.

THERE are some intriguing angles that give added point to Mayo's third successive appearance in a National Football League final. There is the opportunity to gain compensation for failures to Kerry in important games in recent times and the fascinating challenge of trying to overcome successfully the threat to the position Mayo have held for so long as the pace-setters in the League.

First of all, let's take that pace-setting role that has the county going into this game in quest of an 11th title. Only Kerry, who now have nine crowns, approach the Mayo position at the head of the chart.

It's a record built on almost unbelievable feats by "yesterday's men" . . . performances in a period in the 'Thirties when the county's football talents blossomed so majestically that the National League was won year after year with almost monotonous regularity.

Indeed, not for years has any Mayo side exhibited in such brilliant fashion the outstanding qualities paraded by the present outfit in the two gripping matches with Offaly last month.

In addition, Mayo go into final final with tons of experience—Ray Prendergast, Johnny Carey, John Morley, Tom Fitzgerald, John Gibbons, Joe Corcoran, Des Griffith, Willie McGee, J. J. Cribbin, and Sean O'Grady, who went in as a substitute, all helped to bring that 1969-70 title to the West. They were again to the fore last year when Kerry's winning margin was three points (O'Grady once more went in as a sub.).

Another link with that 1970 win is Joe Langan, now the team's shrewd coach, while Brian O'Reilly and Sean Kilbride also have the experience of a final appearance last year.

Mayo have still to beat Kerry in a decider (last year's was the first between the counties), but there is always a first time, as Kerry themselves showed a year ago and it will certainly not be for the want of effort and skilled play if Mayo fail.

NA GAIRM SCOILEANNA

THE All-Ireland football championship for Cumann Luthchleas Gael na nGairm Scol was launched in 1961. To-day's final will make history, as neither Carlow nor Leitrim have won the title.

Leitrim enter the game with probably the best credentials any team can bring to a national final—a win in a replay over Kerry. The Connacht boys drew their semi-final at Ballinasloe on April 23 (Leitrim 0-6; Kerry 1-3), and won the replay at Nenagh a week later by 3-11 to 0-8.

Form like that speaks well for the skills and class of this John Donohue, Liam McGovern and Oliver Prunty-led side.

However, Carlow also have much to recommend them. They looked a strong team, well served in all departments, when scoring a 3-12 to 1-11 semi-final win, at An Uaimh on April 23, over Fermanagh. Judging them on that good display, A. Keating, E. O'Leary, F. Garrett, E. Deane, N. Fleming and their colleagues can be depended upon to make a spirited bid to take the trophy.

● Mayo forwards, Willie McGee (No. 14) and J. J. Cribbin (No. 15) press an attack on the Offaly goal in the semi-final replay on April 30.

So, here is a game that has the makings of one of the best finals on record.

Leinster teams have not enjoyed a great deal of success in the championship. In fact, the title has been brought to the province on only two occasions—in 1962 and 1963. Both of those wins were recorded by Dublin City.

The Connacht record is a little better. Galway brought the title to the West in 1964 and retained the championship in the following year. The next win by a Connacht side was recorded last year by Mayo, who beat Antrim in the final.

Here is a province-by-province break-down of the Roll of Honour:

- 5—Ulster: Tyrone—1967, 1969, 1970; Fermanagh—1966; Antrim 1968.
- 3—Connacht: Galway—1964, 1965; Mayo—1971.
- 2—Leinster: Dublin City—1962, 1963.
- 1—Munster: Cork City—1961.

Flair for the big occasion

IT will be a remarkable achievement by Kerry if they come back from the frustrations of morale-shattering failures to Cork in the Munster championship final last July and to Offaly and Dublin last December in the current National League, to scale a peak no county has achieved in more than 30 years.

For the first time since the early 'Thirties, Kerry go into a final as defending champions and we have to go back to the end of a golden era for Mayo, from 1933-34 to 1938-39, during which they won six titles in a row, for the last occasion any county won the League in successive seasons.

When we consider the way in which the League has become so keenly competitive and the fact that the competition is also now a great test of the dedication, spirit and drive of players, it is all the more a tribute to the wonderful qualities of the Kerry men that, in the face of their three set-backs in the past nine months, they have already accomplished so much in defence of their title.

But then, Kerry men have a traditional flair for turning on the style in the games that matter. Their tremendous achievements in the championship (All-Ireland title-winners for the 22nd time in 1970) tend to cloud their feats in League football. Nevertheless, few can also match the Kingdom's contribution to the history of the points competition.

Indeed, Kerry are the modern-day specialists of the League. In 1957 they won their way back to a final after, incredibly, an absence of a quarter of a century, but lost a memorable encounter with Galway.

They were back again in 1958-59 to usher in a new success story with a win over Derry. Since then, they have the perfect record from four finals and their record of five Leagues since 1959 is the best by any county in this particular period. Next in line are Down, with three titles.

● Ar lean leath. 9

● Ó leath. 7

Their first League final engagement was in 1927-28, the second season of the series, when they beat Kildare. The League was retained in the following year after another final with Kildare. There was no decider in 1930, but Kerry won out again in 1930-31, and 1931-32. This is their first appearance in a decider as holders of the title since that 1932 game, in which Cork provided the opposition.

The Kerry team has not changed greatly from the side that won the county's ninth crown last June by beating Mayo, the 1969-70 title-winners. Among those who put their talents on parade in that final were Donie O'Sullivan, Paud O'Donoghue, Seamus Fitzgerald, Tom Prendergast, John O'Keeffe, Paud Lynch (he got his place as deputy for Mick O'Connell, who cried off on the day of the final), Brendan Lynch, Eamonn O'Donoghue, Liam Higgins, Mick Gleeson, Mick O'Dwyer, Derry Crowley, who went in as a substitute, Mick O'Shea, D. J. Crowley and Pat Griffin.

Mick O'Dwyer, whose dynamic sharp-shooting has meant so much to Kerry in recent years, is in line for a sixth final winning outing. He was in defence in 1959, 1961 and 1963, and shooting scores for Kerry in 1969 and in last season's series. Mick O'Connell is the only other link with 1959. He played in 1961, as well, but missed the 1963 win, in addition to last year's.

LEAGUE SCORERS

Mick O'Dwyer is well ahead in the Kerry scoring chart with 1-44 (47 points). Next comes Brendan Lynch with 0-22, and he is followed by Mick Gleeson with 3-8. Sharing fourth place are Mick O'Connell 0-10, and Paud Lynch 1-7. The chart is completed by Liam Higgins 0-9; Pat Griffin 1-1; Dan Kavanagh 1-1; Eamonn O'Donoghue 0-2, Jackie Walsh 0-2, and John O'Keeffe, Donie O'Sullivan, Michael O'Sullivan and Pat Moynihan, with 0-1 each.

Joe Corcoran is the ace Mayo marksman with 0-32. J. J. Cribbin takes second place with 4-11, and he is followed by Willie McGee, who scored 3-2. Pat Glavey hit 1-6, Frank Burns 1-5, Sean Kilbride 1-4, John Gibbons 0-7, Tom O'Malley 1-3, Sean O'Grady 1-1, Tom Fitzgerald 0-2, Martin Sheridan 0-2, and John Morley, Ray Niland, Michael Begley, Seamus Healy, Mick Higgins and Des Griffith 0-1 each.

THEIR PATHS TO THE FINAL

KERRY lost two games in succession midway through their eight-match march to this League final.

October 31—Kerry 3-17; Waterford 0-3—at Tralee.

November 14—Kerry 0-13; Tipperary 1-7—at Tipperary.

November 28—Kerry 2-12; Cork 1-5—at Tralee.

December 12—Kerry 1-9; Offaly 2-14—at Tullamore.

December 19—Kerry 0-11; Dublin 3-9—at Croke Park.

February 6—Kerry 0-13; Galway 0-8—at Killarney.

February 27—Kerry 1-18; Kildare 1-10—at Droichead Nua.

April 9—Semi-final: Kerry 0-17; Derry 0-13—at Croke Park.

This gives the League title-holders a combined score of 7-110 (131 points) at a match average of 16.37 points. They conceded 8-69 (93 points), or an average of 11.62 points per outing.

Mayo, like Kerry, lost two games on the way to the final. They had one engagement more than the holders.

October 17—Mayo 2-16; Antrim 3-4—at Castlebar.

October 31—Mayo 1-9; Fermanagh 2-5—at Irvinestown.

November 14—Mayo 0-11; Meath 1-5—at Ballina.

November 28—Mayo 0-5; Derry 0-13—at Ballinascreen.

December 12—Mayo 2-7; Sligo 0-12—at Crossmolina.

February 27 — Mayo 4-5; Laois 2-4—at Charlestown.

March 12—Mayo 0-7; Down 2-10—at Newcastle.

April 16 — Semi-final: Mayo 2-10; Offaly 0-16—at Croke Park.

April 30—Replay: Mayo 1-11; Offaly 0-8—at Croke Park.

The challengers' over-all scoring totals are 12-81 (117 points), at exactly 13 points per game for and 10-77 (107 points) or 11.88 points, per match against.

The Kerry team who beat Derry, 0-17 to 0-13, in the semi-final on April 9.
